

Washington Post realigns editors for new duties filled by Carl A. Kramer, now assistant picture editor and formerly assistant bureau chief of the Washington office of UPI Photos.

New appointments to the Washington Post's news staff have been announced by Executive Editor Benjamin C. Bradlee and Managing Editor Eugene C. Patterson.

Philip M. Foisie, foreign editor since 1959, becomes an assistant managing editor in charge of the Washington Post's foreign operations, including its participation in the Los Angeles Times/Washington Post News Service and the Paris Herald Tribune. Foisie joined the Post as a cable editor in 1955.

Replacing Foisie is Harry M. Rosenfeld, day foreign editor and former foreign editor of the New York Herald Tribune.

Lee Lescaze, just returned from a tour of duty in Vietnam, will fill the day foreign editor's slot.

On the local staffs, Stephen D. Isaacs, city editor since 1965, has been given the new position of metropolitan editor.

J. W. Anderson becomes city editor. He has been an editorial writer, chief education writer and day city editor.

Assistant City Editor Andrew Barnes will be day city editor; William J. Brady will move from night city editor to be Isaac's night metropolitan editor, a new title; and Ralph F. Reikowsky, now suburban copy chief, will fill the new position of metropolitan copy chief.

Kenneth P. Johnson, news editor since 1967 and former managing editor of the Savannah Morning News, assumes the new job of executive news editor in charge of news assembly.

John M. Lemmon moves up from city copy chief to the news editor slot.

A new position of assistant director of photography will be